LETTERING THE UNDERGROUND

On Wednesday 10th January 2018 the London Underground celebrates 154 years of operations. Lettering The Underground is a series of 13 hand lettering illustrations that visually celebrates the rich character of the 13 historic London Underground tube lines.

When you're exploring a new city, your eyes are always drawn to the unique things that locals consider banal and everyday. These interesting details are camouflaged to the familiar eyes that glide past them daily, but to you they stand out like beacons, illuminating the hidden character of a new place.

That was my experience when I first moved to London. I'd heard the horror stories about the tube, how it could test the calmest persons patience and how the best way to navigate through the labyrinth was with great haste. However, I soon realised that if you adjust your tempo, slow things down a little and open your eyes, there's beauty to be found underground.

Typography, colours, patterns and textures all combine to create the rich tapestry of the London Underground. These hidden-in-plain-sight details inspired me to produce my most ambitious lettering project to date. Lettering The Underground is a series of 13 lettering illustrations that visually celebrates the rich character of the 13 historic London Underground tube lines.

The Lettering The Underground research was a journey in itself and a big part of the creative process. I spent days exploring the tube, travelling each line, collecting inspiration along the way. I studied the collection in the studio, cherry picked certain elements, applied my own illustrative style and created a lettering series highlighting the beautiful characteristics of the Underground.

Lettering The Underground is an exploration, a celebration and most importantly a journey.
